The Chief Recruiting Officer
Dropbox.
To Whom It May Concern,

I am studying Computer Engineering at University of Houston, with a projected graduation date of May 2017. I am highly interested in an internship with Dropbox and, in view of my attached resume, I believe I am suitable for an intern position in the Technology Division.

I, personally, am motivated to apply because of my great interest in technology in itself, as well as my desire to undertake a career with an institution such as Dropbox upon graduation. This opportunity would expose me to numerous opportunities targeted at honing my effective technical and interpersonal skills.

I am constantly looking for ways to maximize it functionality of applications I use. That indicated, I have successfully completed a Google Chrome extension which allows users tweet, by right-clicking, without having to open the Twitter webpage. Also, I have integrated bash and AppleScript to provide a command-line interface for users to play their favorite songs directly using the terminal.

I spent my summer working for Cummins Inc. (a Fortune 500 company in Columbus, IN) as a Business Technology Analyst intern, where I was exposed to numerous new technologies and methods. I had the task of developing an automated tool to streamline the major work processes of my team, while ensuring that the tool covered all the needs and requirements of the stakeholders. A truly eclectic blend of technology, business and human interaction. I also currently work a part-time job on campus where I assist patrons with basic troubleshooting for Windows, OS X and Linux.

As far as my skills go, I have worked with: Java, C/C++, Bash, Android Development, JavaScript, HTML, CSS and AppleScript. My background in computer engineering gives me some duality in function, as I am competent with hardware and software. Professionally, I am a team player who is determined and detail oriented. I have a healthy drive for knowledge and I love learning new things. My ability to work in cooperation with teams allows me to consistently achieve goals, and I intend to continue with this trend at Dropbox.

If granted an opportunity to apply my skill set at Dropbox, I would bring new technical ideas due to my innovation, adaptability to new technologies and analytical problem solving. I believe I would be a good fit for your establishment because I put in distinguished extra effort in order to achieve.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Idam Obiahu.
